

Testamently

The half they'll need.

A private, encrypted vault for the codes, locations and last words that unlock what you leave behind — released to the people you trust, only if your check-ins ever stop.

What it is

Not a password manager, and not a legal will. Testamently holds the things that would otherwise be lost — the PIN to the phone with the family photos, a life-insurance policy no one knows about, where the safe is, a letter to your children. On its own it opens nothing: the other half — the phone, the wallet, the safe — lives with you, so a breach reveals nothing usable.

We keep the code

The PIN, the safe combo, where things are kept — encrypted, released only on your terms.

Your home keeps the thing

The phone, the wallet, the safe itself — never uploaded, never ours to lose.

Access, at the right time

Only your trustees, only once both halves meet — and only after you're gone.

A few things people keep here

Access

- Phone PIN — for the photos
- Crypto wallet PIN & recovery
- Home-safe combination

They'd never find

- A life-insurance policy
- An account abroad
- Where the will & solicitor are

Irreplaceable

- A letter to your children
- Where the photos & videos live
- The story behind a ring

Legal notice. Testamently is a private, encrypted information vault — not a legal will, trust or estate-administration service, and not a substitute for one. Release to trustees is a convenience, not probate. It can hold a copy of your official will, or point your family to the solicitor who keeps the original.

THE APP · V4 (CONT.)

Trustees

What each person will receive, gap nudge.

Trustee view

What a trustee sees once the vault is released.

Check-in

Reassuring status + a concrete "what if I stop?".

Settings

Default encryption + release / activation timing.